The fundamental principle of addition is that 1 and 1—2. Up-to-date this has never been discredited. But here we show proof that such is not always the case.

For instance a dollar deposited this morning, and another one this afternoon on the same account, ordinarily would at the end of the year mean $2.00. However, the sum on deposit one year from to-day would be $2.06.

JEFF CUNDIFF BAGS BAD MAN

Follows Him to His Lair And Captures Him After A
Duel in the Dark.

GOES THROUGH AMBUSH.

Escaped With Several Holes
In Clothing And One
In His Hat.

After two days' traveling through a country where he was shot at several times from ambush, Deputy United States Marshal Jeff Cundiff, finally, Tuesday night, managed to corral Jesse Skaggs, an alleged moonshiner in a corner of Larue county, where, after a desperate battle, he reduced Skaggs to subjection says the Louisville Times.

"Deputy Cundiff had been given a warrant for Skaggs' arrest several days before he could find any trace of him, but through some friends of his Cundiff located Skaggs in the outskirts of Larue county Monday.

Mounted on a fleet horse, Skaggs took to the hills, and while Cundiff

was in hot pursuit Skaggs' friends opened fire upon the deputy at every turn of the road. Cundiff's coat was twice grazed by bullets and his hat also bears a token of the deperate attempt that was made to check him.

Running into Skaggs in the hills unexpectedly while the moonshiner was engaged in preparing his evening meal, supposedly under cover, Cundiff ordered him to put up his hands. Instead, it is claimed, that Skaggs reached for his gun that was lying beside him and opened fire upon Cundiff.

A duel in the dark followed, each man taking advantage of the first available cover and finally, by resorting to a ruse, Cundiff approached within such distance of Skaggs that he was enabled to grab him.

In the hand-to-hand encounter that followed Cundiff managed to get his revolver against Skaggs' head where, upon realizing that further resistance was useless, Skaggs surrendered. Skaggs was taken before Dr. Baldrik, at Lebanon, who fixed the man's bond at $500. This Skaggs was unable to furnish and he was brought to this city to-day and taken to the county jail, where he will be confined until the Federal grand jury sits. Outside of a few bruises Cundiff was unharmed.

Marshal Cundiff will return home to-night to resume his work in this city.

Association Officers of Trigg County Issue An Address.

SENTIMENT AROUSED.

Friends Of Association Urged to Cease Acts of "Personal Violence."

Cadiz Record.

The undersigned members of the Trigg County Executive Committee of the Planters Protective Association take this means of calling attention to the sad occurrences recently reported, and of defining their attitude in relation to the matter. This committee, representing the Association, has never counseled, aided or abetted lawlessness in any form. It feels that in the present state of public feeling the Association has been freely charged with all the ills incidents to agitated conditions, and the good it has accomplished not fully credited.

We realize that in revolutionary periods it is but natural that outbreaks and violence should occur, caused by the remembrance of wrongs suffered.

As a body, trying earnestly to represent the true interests of the Association, we have viewed with much regret the acts of violence reported from time to time, not only in our own county, but in others as well. While the destruction of property is lamentable, all facts of personal violence are more to be deplored, neither of which commend itself to our favor.

We have no knowledge of who is guilty, nor have we any control over them.

But we call upon all good citizens to unite with us in an effort to disentangle same, and to prevent a repetition of similar acts, the tendency of which is towards the subversion of law and order and our own good name.

We call upon all in a serious manner—if any friends of the Association are engaged in these of personal violence, to cease same in order that the Planters

Association may not be brought into disrepute.

We believe such things are inimical to our best interest, and we fear that in many instances private enmity has been manifested, and if continued great evil will result.

We realize that our people have suffered many wrongs, but the part of true manhood should be to bear all with patience, and trust to the association to relieve you in time.

The work it has already done is but an earnest of what it can do in the future, and what it will surely do if it is continued upon the highest principles of honor and good citizenship.

The friends of the association should look to its interest, which surely does not lie in a total disregard of the personal as well as the property rights of citizens.

The Growth of Our Business

proves beyond question that we are gaining new friends every day.

We have just unloaded a car of weather boarding and several of flooring.

Our stock has been moving out so rapidly that we find it difficult to keep a supply on hand. We have an abundance of red cedar shingles on the yard, having just received a car direct from Washington. They are of a superior quality and we don't expect them to remain in our possession very long.

Simple Remedies.

Roup—A subscriber giving neither name nor address contributes the following: "For roup in chickens I use this remedy: To each quart of drinking water, add one one-hundredth of a grain of arsenite of antimony and a teaspoonful of kerosene. I set this where the birds can drink when they desire water. Plenty of air-slacked lime should be sprinkled over the floor of the house and the pens. If the birds are very sick I give each one two grains of calcium sulphide once each day in little wet mash.

Condition Powders—One of the best condition powders for hens may be made of the following: Two pounds of linseed meal, two pounds of green cut bone, one pound of charcoal, two ounces of sulphur, one ounce of salt, two ounces of ground ginger, four ounces of fenugreek. Mix well and add two tablespoonfuls to each quart of ground feed given the laying birds. As a conditioner for laying hens in both winter and summer, this has few equals.

Cholera—One of the first things necessary in treating the birds for cholera is to thoroughly disinfect the house in which they roost. This may be done by sprinkling the floor with a solution of crude carbolic acid and hot water, by scattering a liberal amount of air-slacked lime over the floor or by burning sulphur in the house when all the birds are out. In the drinking water place a little carbolic acid, about a teaspoonful to each two gallons of water being sufficient. Then feed one tablespoonful of the following mixture each day in the feed of twenty-five chickens: Sulphur, eight ounces; black antimony, two ounces; saltpeter, two ounces; cayenne pepper, two ounces; Jamaica ginger, two ounces.

Feather Eating—A Montpelier, Ind., subscriber's chickens are addicted to the habit of feather pulling and eating. The birds pull and eat the feathers of other birds till some of them are almost featherless. This habit is hard to overcome. In fact, we only know of but one case where it was really overcome. The bird was a high priced one and the owner did not wish to kill it. It took him two years of continued effort to correct the habit. In the case of common barnyard fowls it is generally cheaper to put them in the fattening pen and place them on the market as soon as possible. As soon as a bird shows signs of the habit, remove it from the rest of the flock. If possible, place it in a pen or coop by itself. Feed liberally of a mixture of meat and bone meal. The birds acquire the habit in the attempt to satisfy the desire for more animal food. If the bird is fed on little animal food in the form of meat and bone meal, the trouble will be prevented in a large measure. Mix a little sulphur either in the drinking water or in the soft feed. Rub the feathers near the picked places with powdered aloes and lard, equal parts. Another good treatment to place on the feathers is lard and a part and cayenne pepper, two parts.

Loss of Feathers—It frequently happens that fowls lose their feathers. Sometimes the broody hens have few feathers that they are unable to hover their little chicks. Make a mixture of one part of fenugreek and two parts of flaxseed meal and give a teaspoonful once each day in the soft feed of each dozen birds. Journal of Agriculture.

200 Egg Hen.

Those who have doubted that there are such things as 200 egg hens will have to admit that they exist in considerable numbers, if they believe the report of the Australian egg laying contest. These hens were in pens of six each and the winning pen—Black Langshans, the progeny of birds brought from China—laid an average of 247 eggs each during the year. The next two highest pens were White Leghorns, averaging respectively 239 and 229 eggs each. The eleven highest pens of 66 birds averaged over 200 eggs each. While there was no pen below No. 11 that averaged 200 eggs, the seventeen highest pens as a whole averaged a little better than 200 eggs for each hen. The lowest record was 120 and the average for the 600 birds competing 171. This was pretty good laying, but we have farms in America where 600 hens are kept and all owned by one man that exceed this number. One farm in Kentucky has 1,000 hens, and has averaged 200 eggs each from 700 hens for 18 years. A New York farmer feeds from 600 hens, and at that time people who dared to claim that their hens had made records of 200 eggs in a year were referred to as 200 egg hens. There is no telling what the possibilities of the American hen are.

A Few Left.

We still have left about 40 copies of MEACHAM'S CITY DIRECTORY of Hopkinsville for 1907, which will be sold while they last at $1.00 each. It has been eight years since the last directory was issued and the new one will have to be used for several years. Business men who have not supplied themselves, should act promptly if they want one.

Of all the causes that combine to make poultry raising uncertain, that of lice is the greatest, and to it can be traced the numerous failures of careless and inefficient poultrymen.

The direct result of the ravages of lice is to sap the vigor of fowls and keep them from producing a profit. This any poultryman knows. Lice also undermine the constitution of fowls and render them liable to the various diseases of the poultry yard.

It has been a standing puzzle to find a powder that would kill the lice the moment it touches, without harming the fowl in the least degree, and the trouble has been that most powders either just numb the lice so that they will still crawl about and revive, or else the powder will injure the fowls while killing the lice. Many powders harm the eyes of fowls and impair their sight.

There has been a new lice powder discovered during this year—1907—that is a marvel of perfection. It is absolute and instant death to the louse and is perfectly harmless to the birds. It is the perfected result of twelve years research and incessant trial, and costs no more than the powders that fail to exterminate. It is Conkey's Lice Powder.

In order to convince the poultry fraternity that this long sought necessity is at last on the market, the manufacturers are taking the whole cost on themselves to let the poultrymen make an absolutely free and thorough trial, with a very liberal sample, which will be sent post paid to any address upon application.

The following method for testing the sample is the surest and best: Take a fowl you know to be lousy and hold it up by the legs. Dust the powder from the package into the feathers, and rub it in, so that it may reach the skin. Be sure and work the flour into the fluffy feathers, especially about the vent. Then stand the bird on a large sheet of white paper and fluff the feathers with the hand. The lice will drop out on the paper, where you can examine and find them absolutely dead and without a possible chance of reviving and multiplying. This treatment should be repeated in about a week to kill the nits which may hatch out.

Everyone trying this powder is enthusiastic over it and all say that it is the greatest article ever discovered for the absolute extermination of lice on poultry. It is also excellent for fleas on dogs, and lice on cattle and other animals. A very liberal sample will be mailed absolutely free and post paid on application to the G. E. Conkey Company, Cleveland, Ohio.

Movement to Protect Doves.

An article published in one of the local papers by "L" suggesting that the close season for doves be extended to Aug. 21, this year, on account of the backward condition of the birds and their scarcity in this locality, is timely and ought to be heeded.

It is urged, and with good reason, that the birds need this protection, this season especially, and that a paper be circulated among the shooters pledging the signers not to shoot any until that date. "L" says he would sign such a paper (so will I) and expresses a belief that all true sportsmen would do the same. The best shooting is always obtained after the young birds are well grown and the old ones have fattened up for the summer moult.

It remains to be seen whether people will voluntarily do a thing because it is right, or wait for the law to say "Thou shalt not."

There is money in hens if they are rightly managed, but a large egg farm under mismanagement will lose money for its owner as rapidly as a circus in wet weather. One man said he knew there was money in the hen business for he had put several hundred dollars in it and never taken a cent out, so it must be there.

TERRY COAL & COKE CO.
Hopkinsville, Ky.

GENTLEMEN:

Replying to your favor of the 14th instant, I unhesitatingly advise all consumers of coal to lay in a supply during the summer months and thereby avoid the inconvenience which must result on account of a shortage of cars next winter which in my opinion will be much more acute than was the shortage of last winter, unless the consumers lay in their coal supply as suggested.

You are at liberty to publish this in the interest of the producers and consumers of Coal.

Yours Very Truly,
C. C. McCORD, Chairman,
Terry Coal & Coke Co. of Ky.

The railroad and coal operating officials of Western Kentucky have given out the same official notice, and urge us to advise our stockholders, and customers to lay in their coal this summer.

Last winter's experience and high price of coal will give above timely information should be sufficient warning, and we trust that you will take advantage of it and act at once.

We are ready to supply you with coal in car load lots over either R. R. any day "the best coal at summer time price," and trust that you will give us your orders early while we can get the cars to ship.

FOR KENTUCKY—Probably thunder showers and cooler Saturday.

Jas. F. Grinstead will oppose Geo. W. Smith for the Republican nomination in Louisville.

The last speech in the Haywood case was made yesterday by Senator Borrah and the famous case is now in the hands of ten juries.

Caleb Powers is put on trial at Georgetown Monday and will try to swear Judge J. E. Robbins off the bench.

Jas. B. Duke, head of the tobacco Trust, has made enough money to justify him in entering matrimony for a second time. He married a New York widow this week.

A Danish civil engineer, says a consular report just issued, has succeeded in producing beer in the form of tablets. These are dissolved in hot water. When the beverage is cooled it is a beer of excellent quality and flavor.

Gov. Beckham on Thursday appointed the 36 members of the General Council of Louisville. Only three members of the Board of Councilmen and five from the Board of Aldermen, were appointed from the ousted members.

The peace proclamation in Trigg county did not come too soon, and it is to be hoped it will have the desired effect. Some very influential names are attached to the appeal, and in order to give it a wide circulation we reproduced it in to-day's Kentuckian.

The Paducah Register editorially calls upon the City Council to enact a law compelling ice men to make their 100 pound cakes of ice weigh 100 pounds. It says many of them have a hole in the center and customers are being robbed of 20 or 30 per cent by short weights for inferior ice.

The August number of the Woman's Home Companion is primarily an all-story number—except, of course, for the twelve indispensable departments that appear in each issue. The second instalment of Anthony Hope's new love story "Helena's Fath," appears in this number, and all the other fiction comes up to the excellent standard of Mr. Hope's novel.

With the observance of the greatest privacy, Mme. Fromkin, who in March last attempted to assassinate Gen. Rheinholt, the ex-Perfessor of Police, and who in May made an attempt to murder the inspector of the political prison at Moscow, wounding him with a pistol which had been mysteriously smuggled into her cell, was hanged Thursday.

The authorities made every effort to persuade the woman to plead for the mercy of the Emperor, but this she obstinately refused to do.

Bishop Vincent of the Methodist Episcopal Church at a Chautauqua in Coffeyville, Mo., attacked modern evangelistic methods as "sensational and emotional." Ever since the first great revival on the day of Pentecost the evangelists have been the principal forces in the spread of the Gospel. If Bishop Vincent thinks as he is quoted, is out of accord with all Christian denominations. He should remember the fate of another Bishop who advocated "decent saloons" a few years ago and destroyed his usefulness as a church man.

The Trigg county night riders grow worse in their lawlessness all the time. They tried to add murder to their list of outrages, but failed. Not can not the better class of people in that section unite to stop the outrages that are bringing further shame on the state?—State Journal.

The time has come when the strong arm of the law should be laid upon anarchy and its defenders in the home county of the Adjutant General. It is no longer a theory, but a condition that confronts the state.

A QUINTETTE

Of Hobos Rounded Up Thursday Night.

Tom Clark, Will Edwards, Harry Anderson, Charlie Johnston and Jess Coleman, who claim Nashville as their home, some of them giving the number and name of the street on which they live, woke up in the station Friday morning where they had spent the night.

What induced the five hobos to come here to sleep in open cars and on platforms was to be ascertained in the city court yesterday evening. There are at least as many cars in Nashville as here and the vagrancy ordinance is going to be more rigidly enforced than ever.

Hopkinsville has really been suffering with an influx of the lame, the halt and the blind for about three weeks, and none of them were disturbed, but when the healthy, hungry and lazy hobo strikes the town his days are numbered here. The police will take him in short order. But professional beggars will not be wanted here, and they will learn it before long.

Rev. M. A. Jenkins is at Dawson this week assisting in the evangelistic services being held throughout the summer.

TOBACCO TRUST

Prosecutor Jas. C. McReynolds holds an Elkhorn Man.

The Nashville American of Thursday contained a brief sketch of Hon. James C. McReynolds who has been employed by the Government to prosecute what is known as the tobacco trust and its allies. Mr. McReynolds is a son of the late Dr. J. O. McReynolds, of Elkhorn, who died two years ago. He is second cousin of Supreme T. J. McReynolds, the American had the following to say of Elkhorn's gifted son: a splendid picture of Mr. McReynolds headed the article.

When quite a young man he removed from Elkhorn, Ky., to Nashville and began here the practice of his profession, rising as fast as possible. He practiced mainly in the Chancery Court.

The ability he exhibited in the preparation of pleading in important cases and the clear-cut nature of his arguments before the courts gained him considerable reputation. When the Hon. J. M. Dickinson, who has been a Nashville lawyer, was signed as one of the assistants of the United States Attorney, Mr. McReynolds was appointed to succeed him. In that office he displayed such ability before the United States Supreme Court in handling the cases of the Government that he attracted the marked attention of President Roosevelt, who was loath to accept his resignation. On his removal to New York City to engage in the practice of his profession he was employed by the legal department to prepare and institute the case in which he is now engaged, and for which a life-long training peculiarly fitted him.

Hailing from the dark tobacco district and cherishing, as he does, a strong friendship for his old neighbors and friends, who believe themselves greatly wronged, by the methods pursued by the trust in controlling the principal product of that region, it may well be believed that conscientious spirit will characterize his professional labor in the Government's behalf.

Had Relatives Here.

Mobile, Ala., July 24.—Dr. J. T. Killebrew, one of the most prominent of the younger physicians of this city, was ground to pieces this afternoon under the wheels of a string of freight cars at the crossing of the Mobile, Jackson & Kansas City railroad at Ann and Tennessee streets. Perrin Bestora, a prominent young attorney, and society man was seriously injured, and Walter P. Horn, a young business and club man, slightly injured as the result of an automobile accident, when returning from the ball games at Monroe Park.

Walter Horn was driving. Dr. Killebrew was on the front seat with him and, in jumping, tripped and fell on the track and under the wheels of the moving cars. The automobile was driven on to the track before the train of cars was seen. Dr. Killebrew was president of the Mobile County Medical Society, a lecturer on the diseases of women in the medical department of the University of Alabama, and an assistant in the Inge-Bondurant Infirmary here.

Dr. Killebrew had relatives in this city and county, among whom are Miss Fannie Belle Brionaugh, the Misses Starling, on East 17th street, and Louis Starling, of Clay and 10th streets.

New Ruling on Post Cards.

According to a new order issued by the Postmaster General, messages may be written on the face of postal cards, provided the writing is confined to the left end of the card and not extended over more than one third of the surface. This order is to go into effect on August 1.

The order provides that after August 1 postal cards may be used as post cards and may be divided by a vertical line placed approximately one third of the distance from the left end of the card; the space to the left of the line to be used for a message, but space to the right for an address only.

YOUNG MAN DROWNED.

John Myers, of Earlington Meets A Tragic Fate.

Earlington Ky., July 25.—John Myers, a popular Earlington young man and sergeant in Company G, Kentucky State Guard, was drowned this evening about 8 o'clock. Going to a pond a mile south of town, he ran for about a quarter of a mile and jumped into the water while hot. He started to swim across and got into deep water, where he was evidently taken with cramps and went down. There were no strong swimmers present, but Page Blakenore, of Hopkinsville, a Kentucky University man and athlete, who is doing engineering work here during vacation, got there a few minutes after Myers sank, and brought the body up after diving several times. Myers was under water fifteen minutes or more. Two physicians were gotten to the scene quickly but every effort to revive him failed. He will be buried Saturday with military honors.

HOBO ATTACKS

Engineer Christman Because He Couldn't Go On Engine.

While standing on the track at Elkhorn Pond, the engineer of freight train No. 394, Mr. Roy Christman, had a visit from a tramp who wanted to have a free ride on the engine. Christman put the man off and got out of the cab to oil his engine when the disappointed tramp went up behind him and began pummeling the engineer on the head with a spittoon. The tramp had every advantage of the engineer, and had not some of the crew of the train gone to his assistance of the tramp might have been guilty of murder. As it was Christman was injured to such an extent that he had to be carried to the I. C. hospital at Paducah.

WARNED

Not To Thresh Wheat of Downer Bros., Members Of Association.

News comes from Guthrie that James Johnson, who operates a threshing machine, has been warned not to thresh the wheat crop of Downer Bros., as well as the crop of W. D. Merritt. Downer Bros. it seems, are members of the association and claim that they had sold their tobacco crop through the association and wanted the advisory board to give them the papers to that effect, which was not done, the board telling them that if they had sold their wheat through the association all they had to do was to produce their checks.

A Few Left.

We still have left about 40 copies of MEACHAM'S CITY DIRECTORY of Hopkinsville for 1907, which will be sold while they last at $1.00 each. It has been eight years since the last directory was issued, and the new one will have to be used for several years. Business men who have not supplied themselves, should act promptly if they want one.

HEBREW CHRISTIAN.

Will Preach at the Baptist Church Sunday.

R. V. A. Lichtenstein, Superintendent of Jewish Mission Work in St. Louis and through the South, will fill Dr. Jenkins' pulpit Sunday morning and evening. He will preach especially about Israel and how the Jews are receiving Christ at this time. He will have pictures of people who have been converted in his mission and of missionaries who are preaching Christ today. He preached in this city two years ago.

He comes as a substitute for Dr. Jenkins, who is engaged in a meeting at Dawson. His series of special sermons will be resumed the first Sunday in August, with the first three sermons on Palestine. Dr. Lichtenstein's sermons will be very timely in this connection.

Symptoms of Disease

Disease is a most difficult thing to wrestle with in poultry. It is far easier to prevent it than it is to combat it when it obtains a foot-hold. Often a person will employ more time and medicine than a bird is worth. The following will help most poultrymen to locate the difficulty and will also suggest treatment:

When the excrement secreted by the kidneys, which is normally white appears yellow, though the droppings are solid and the bird appears perfectly healthful lookout for bowel trouble.

When the crop is hard, distended and unyielding there is danger of the bird becoming crop-bound.

When the discharges are streaked with blood it is time to give preventatives for diarrhoea.

When the joints are hot and swollen and the fowl is disinclined to stand, rheumatism has taken hold.

When the nostrils are clogged with dirt and the eyes water, ward off possible cases of roup by timely treatment. If the case is bad, use the hatchet.

When the bird is lame in one foot and a small swelling is observed remove it to a place where there is no roosts and compel it to roost on some straw or other material. It is a bumble foot and is cured in this manner.

When a hen drops down behind, goes to the nest often, but does not lay she is suffering from disorder of the oviduct and might as well be killed and eaten.

When a bird is "going light," has a good appetite, but passes food from the bowels undigested, it is in the early stages of consumption and treatment is useless.

When a bird has leg weakness with no disorder of the liver, feed lighter and give plenty of bone forming food.

When new fowls are bought they should be quarantined until one is assured that they have no disease that is communicative to the flock.

When a bird has difficulty in breathing it is well to look out for pneumonia.

When a fowl sneezes, wates slightly at the eyes and nostrils and the face puffs up, it is a common cold. When accompanied by rattling in the nostrils, Difficult breathing, pneumonia. Canker in the mouth, diarrhea.

When the discharges from the nostrils are profuse and smell smelling it is roup. Lossiness of the bowels usually accompanies this trouble.

Greenish discharges, turning to frothy white, are given as a symptom of cholera.

A dark, purple comb indicates congestion of the liver.—Poultry.

Tennessee State Fair.

Nashville, Tenn., July 1st, 1907.
Dear Sir:

The Tennessee State Fair Association will hold its second annual fair in the city of Nashville, September 23rd-28th, 1907.

You are no doubt aware of the fact that this fair is recognized as one of the greatest fairs in the United States.

The management were so well pleased with the reception accorded the Poultry show at the fair last year and the tremendous success attending same and realizing as they do the importance of this great industry, they have decided to locate it in the South.

In this department this year, besides there will be $50.00 Silver Cup, $25.00 Banner Gold Special and other attractive special premiums.

The Pigeon and Pet Stock department of the big Poultry show will be a prominent feature.

A large Institute will be another big feature of this fair and to those interested in raising poultry.

The best lecturers and demonstrators have been engaged to instruct those attending the Institute which will be located on the grounds and continue the entire week of the fair.

Another feature will be the exhibition yards where flocks of the various breeds of thoroughbred poultry will be exhibited under natural conditions. A big egg laying contest is now being arranged.

All of these besides other attractions, aside from the great poultry show, will make the poultry section the greatest poultry event ever arranged by a state fair.

Nashville besides being the greatest poultry center of the south is now recognized by the breeders over the entire country as one of the greatest poultry show cities in the United States. Nashville means much to the poultry breeders.

A winning of Nashville is a valuable asset to any poultry plant. Come and bring your birds.

Yours, truly,

JOHN A. MURKIN, Jr., Sup't

Poultry Dep't.

— THE — State College of Kentucky,

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.

HE STATE COLLEGE of Kentucky offers the following courses, namely, Agricultural, Mechanical Engineering, Civil Engineering, Mining Engineering, Electrical Engineering, Normal School, Classical and seven Scientific courses, each of which extends over four years and leads to the Bachelor's degree. Each course is organized under a separate faculty. The general faculty, consisting of professors, assistant professors and instructors, numbers over fifty.

The laboratories and museums are large, well equipped, comprehensive and modern. Military Science is fully provided for as required by Congress.

Graduates in the several courses of study readily find employment with liberal remuneration. The total number of matriculates last year was 901. Each department has a specialist at its head, with the necessary number of assistants.

Summer schools are provided for in Pedagogy, Engineering, and instruction in Science and the Liberal Arts. Young women find an excellent home, with board and lodging in Patterson Hall, which is well equipped with all modern conveniences, bath-rooms, hall for physical culture, at $3.00 per week. All the courses of study in the College are open to young women upon identical conditions with those applying to males.

The attendance upon the Normal School in connection with the Department of Education last year more than doubled that of any preceding year.

Three new buildings, namely, one for the department of Education, one for Agricultural Science, and a Library Hall, are in process of erection and will be completed early in the next collegiate year.

He had his somewhat dingy scoulter hat and bowed humbly.

"I perceived no door closing warning that I approached such presence, and the first shock of surprise was perhaps as great to me as to you. Yet, now that I have blundered here, I beseech that I may be permitted to venture upon your steps."

She looked at him, a trim, slender figure, his face young and pleasant to gaze upon, and her dark eyes sensibly softened.

"What step?"

"To tarry for a moment beside the divinity of the wilderness."

She looked with open frankness, her white teeth sparkling behind the red parted lips.

"Perhaps you may, if you will first consent to be sensible," she said, with returning gravity; "and I reserve the right to turn you away whenever you begin to talk or act foolish. If you accept these conditions, you may sit down."

He seated himself upon the soft grass ledge, retarding the bat-in his hands. "You must be an odd sort of a girl," he commented, soberly, "not to welcome an honest expression of admiration."

"Oh, was that it? Then I only how my acknowledgement. I took words for one of those silly compliments by which men believe their honor women. I am not a baby, nor am I seeking amusement."

He glanced curiously at her book. "And yet you condescend to read love stories; he said, smiling, as he expected to discover a trace on philosophy."

"I read whatever I chance to get my hands on, here in Glendale," she reported. "Just as I converse with who ever comes along. I am hopeful of some day discovering a rare gem hidden in the midst of the trash. I am yet young."

"You are indeed young," he said, quietly, "and with some of life's lessons still to learn. One is that frankness is not necessarily flippancy, nor honesty harshness. However, if you will offer me a topic worth the occasion, in either philosophy, science, or literature, I will endeavor to feed your mind."

She uplifted her innocent eyes demurely to his face. "You are so kind. I am deeply interested just now in the Japanese conception of the transmigration of souls."

"How extremely fortunate! It chance to be my favorite theme, but my means are limited. I will do what you will permit me to work up toward it somewhat gradually. For instance, as a question leading that way, how, in the incarnation of this world, do you manage to exist in such a hole of a place—that is, provided you really reside here."

"Very well, consider this a most delightful mook."

"My reference was to Glendale."

"Oh! Why, I live from within, not without. Mind and heart, not environment, make life, and my time is occupied most congenially. I am being faithfully nurtured on the Presbyterian catechism, and also trained the graces of earthly society. These alterations, thus preparing me for whatever may happen in this world or the next."

His face pictured bewilderment, but also a determination to persevere. "An interesting combination, I admit. But from your appearance this cannot always have been your home?"

"Oh, thank you. I believe not always. I wonder, however, if you have time to discern my superiority to these surroundings. And do you know your questioning is becoming quite personal? Does that yield me an equal privilege?"

He bowed, perhaps relieved at thus permitting her to assume the initiative, and rested lazily back upon the grass, his eyes intently studying her face.

"I suppose from your clothes you must be a soldier. What is that figure 7 on your hat for?"

"The number of my regiment, the 7th Cavalry."

Her glance was a bit disengaged as she coolly surveyed him from head to foot. "I should imagine that a strong, capable, appearing fellow like you might do much better than that. There is so much work in the world worth doing, and so much better pay."

"I suppose you are a soldier. I am not a soldier's life a worth 7c?"

"Oh, yes, of course, in a way. We have to have soldiers, I suppose; but if I were a man I'd hate to waste all my life tramping around at $16 a month."

He smothered what sounded like a laugh, and then cast into her demure eyes as if his strength might be a joke hid in their depths. "Do—do you mistake me for an enlisted man?"

"Oh, I didn't know; you said you were a soldier, and that's what I always heard they got. I am so glad if they give you more. I was only going to say that I believed I could get you to stay with me in McCarthy's store if you wanted to. He pays $55 and his clerks have just left."

Brant stared at her with open mouth, totally unable for the moment to decide whether or not that innocent, sympathetic face masked mischief. Before he succeeded in regaining control of his speech, she had slipped a joke hid in their depths. "Do—do you mistake me for an enlisted man?"

CHAPTER XIII.

Silent Murphy.

Brant sprang forward, all doubt regarding this sudden arrival instantly dispelled by those final words of mischievous mockery. She had been playing with him as unconsciously as if he were a mere toy sent for her amusement and his pride was stung.

But purpose proved useless. Like a hawk he had dived away from the undergrowth, his head flying blindly in the labyrinth. His cautious foot slipped along the steep edge of the shelving bank, and he went down, half stumbling, half sliding, until he came to a sudden pause on the brink of the little stream. The chasm was deep, the water black, and he was up to his waist in it, his eyes upon the evidence of his own eyes.

A small tent, dirty and patched, stood with its back against the slope connected with this odd personality. The name had long been a familiar one, and he had often had the man pictured to him before him. There could remain no reasonable doubt of his identity.

"Yes, I've heard of you,"—and his eyes were fixed upon the name of some military command— "although we have never met, for I have been upon detached service ever since my assignment to the regiment. I have a troop in camp below," he pointed down the stream, "and am in command of it."

The scene nodded carelessly.

"Why did you not come down there and report your presence in this neighborhood to me?"

Murphy grinned unpleasantly. "Rather be—alone—no report—been over—Black Range—telegraphed—val or—black."

"Do you mean you are in direct communication with headquarters, with Custer?"

The man answered, with a wide sweep of his long arm toward the northwest. "Goin' to be—heell—out there—damn soon."

"What? Are things developing into a fairly serious affair—a real camp?"

"Every buck—in the—Sioux nation—is makin'—fer the bad lands," and he laughed noiselessly, his nervous fingers gesturing. "—guess that means—business."

He hesitated. Should he attempt to learn more of the young girl. Instinctively he appreciated the worthiness of endeavoring to extract information from Murphy, and he experienced a degree of shame at thus seeking to penetrate her secret. He glanced about, seeking some way of recrossing the stream.

"I've got some new equipment," he said tersely, "we can probably supply you at the camp. How do you manage to get across here?"

Murphy, walking stiffly, led the way across the steep slope, and silently pointed out a log bridging the narrow stream. He stood watching while the girl crossed, her skirt tucked up behind her, her face, his pale face looking grim and unpleasant.

The young officer marched down the road, his mind busied with the peculiar happenings of the morning, and that prospect for early active service. He had been a private in the army, a recruit, a private in the service of a old soldier, he was a thorough soldier, born into the service and deeply enmeshed of its dangers; yet beyond this he remained a man, a young man, swayed by those emotions which when at full tide sweep aside all else pertaining to life.

He had sat staring at the newcomer, unwinning, his facial expression devoid of interest, but his fingers opening and closing in apparent nervousness. He tried to smile at her but nothing except a forced smile could be mustered from the throat, and Brant, by this time had attained his feet and his self-possession, ventured to address her.

"Quite quiet for a camp," he remarked, pleasantly, "but a bad place for a girl."

The sunken eyes expressed nothing, but the throat gurgled again painfully and finally the parted lips dropped a detached word or two. "Blame—private girl—that?"

The lieutenant wondered how much of that conversation this old mummy had overheard, but he hesitated to question her. One inquiry, however, sprang to his surprised lips. "Do you know her?"

"Dame—sight—better—than any one around here know—her real name."

Brant stared incredulously. "Do you mean to tell me that young woman is living in this community under an assumed name?" Why is she more than a child?"

He was in this mood when he overtook the Rev. Howard Wynkoop and marked the thoughtful look upon his pale face.

"I called at your camp," explained Wynkoop, after the first words of greeting, "and the first thing I said was that I am especially urgent invitation, and I am unable to attend the wedding of your son, yet I am to be dancing until late. One cannot be too straightforward here."

"Oh, never mind apologizing. I see no reason why you need hesitate to attend. I merely wondered if you could procure my invitation."

"Did she tell you about it?"

"Well, she didn't hint at it at all, and you know, things are pretty slow here in a social way. She merely suggested that I might possibly meet her again there."

"Of course; it is given in her honor," he said.

I understand, although she sought to deceive me into the belief that she was not the lady. We met purely by accident, you understand, and I am desirous of a more formal presentation."

The minister drew in his breath sharply, and the clasped hands of warmth and welcome will have a card of invitation sent you at the camp. The committee will be very glad of your presence; only I warn you frankly regarding the lady, that competition will be strong."

"Oh, so far as that is concerned I have not yet entered the running," laugh Brant, in affected carelessness, "although most must be aware of my sporting proclivities are somewhat aroused."

He watched the minister walking rapidly away, a short, erect figure, appearing slender in his heavy dark cloth. "Poor little chap," he muttered, regretfully. "He's hard hit still. They say all's fair in love and war."

CHAPTER XIV.

In Honor of Miss Spencer.

Mr. Jack Moffat, president of the Bachelor's Club, P. O. Box 100, had arranged the details of a reception for Miss Spencer with unbound enthusiasm. Indeed, the earliest conception of such an event found birth within his fertile brain, and from the first he determined upon making it the most notable social function ever known in that portion of the territory.

The young man's name was the O'Dell, and the O'Dell was secured for the occasion, an entrance constructed with an outside staircase leading up from a vacant lot, and the passage connecting the saloon boarded up. Mr. Moffat took occasion to announce that if "any" saloon girl drunk and disorderly should be found within the premises, he would throw himself out of a window.

Mr. McNeil, who was observing the preliminary proceedings with deep interest from a pile of lumber opposite, sarcastically intimated that under such circumstances the attendance of club members would be somewhat limited.

Mr. Moffat replied it was perfectly impossible to quote literally. Mr. McNeil was employed to provide the requisite refreshments in the palatial dining-hall of the hotel, while Buck Mason, the vigilant town marshal, popularly supposed to know intimately the faces of the town, was "rounder" in the territory, agreed to collect the cards of invitation at the door, and bar out obnoxious visitors.

The invited guests arrived from the several settled regions round about, not a few riding for a hundred miles over the hard trails. The majority came early, arrayed in whatsoever apparel their limited wardrobe could supply, but ready for any wild frolics. The men outside the general door, however, were every man a representative of a certain young lady, and I am anxious not to hurt her feelings in any way, or to discourage her enthusiasm."

"Oh, I see! Would you mind telling me the name of the two gentlemen?"

"Mr. John Moffat and Mr. William Morris. Unfortunately, I know neither personally."

"And the young lady?"

"A Miss Phoebe Spencer; she has but recently arrived from the east to take charge of our new school—a most interesting and charming young woman, and a most promising musical and artistic talent."

The lieutenant cleared his throat and emitted a sigh of suddenly awakened memory. "I fear I can offer you no advice, but I have a desire to speak to the musicians' stand, where there appeared to be a few unoccupied chairs."

The scene was one of color and action. He watched the speeding figures, striving to distinguish the particular one whose charms had lured him to the dance. But when the latter finally turned to depart, he inquired, "Do you expect to attend the reception tomorrow evening?"

Wynkoop stammered slightly. "I—I could hardly refuse under the circumstances; the committee sent me an especially urgent invitation, and I am unable to decline it. It is to be dancing until late. One cannot be too straightforward here."

"Oh, never mind apologizing. I see no reason why you need hesitate to attend. I merely wondered if you could procure my invitation."

"Did she tell you about it?"

"Well, she didn't hint at it at all, and you know, things are pretty slow here in a social way. She merely suggested that I might possibly meet her again there."

"Of course; it is given in her honor," he said.

Bob a BUSINESS MAN—NOT A BUSINESS MAN.

John W. Jenkins, 229 West Seventh street, Hopkinsville, Ky., says: "Mr. Davis has never had an occasion to use Doan's Kidney Pills or any other kidney medicine since he recommended them in the summer of 1903. For years prior to that time he had been an almost constant sufferer from kidney trouble. He had intense pains in his back which extended to his shoulders and annoyed him all day. They prevented him from sleeping during the night. The relief he obtained from the use of Doan's Kidney Pills which he got at L. A. Johnson & Co.'s drugstore was surprising. They acted differently from any remedy he ever tried and he has never had a recurrence of the trouble since using this valuable remedy four years ago. It speaks pretty strongly for Doan's Kidney Pills that cured him."

HERO IN GRAY WHO IS LOVED BY HUNDREDS OF FERRELL'S BOYS.

Noblest Veteran of The School room Now A Helpless Invalid.

TAUGHT HERE 30 YEARS.

Maj. James Overton Ferrell, Soldier, Instructor And Christian Gentleman.

(U. C. V., Sketch No. 2)

Maj. J. O. Ferrell is a native of South Carolina, and was a gallant soldier of the Lost Cause for nearly four years.

He received a liberal education in the schools of his native State and completing his education, he first taught a school at South Boston, Va. and in 1857 went to Edgefield, S. C. where he became a professor in a boy's school at that place and continued to teach for three years, until the outbreak of the civil war. His school was brought to a close in 1861 and the young schoolmaster enlisted in the 19th Regiment of South Carolina Infantry as a private. He went to Columbia, where his regiment was assigned to Gen. A. M. Manigault's brigade in December 1861. About this time he was made Adjutant to the 19th Regiment and afterwards held the same position when the 19th and 10th Regiments, depleted by heavy fighting, were consolidated.

His first active service was around Corinth, Miss., Farmington in the same State and at other points where there was almost constant fighting. His brigade was a part of the Western Army of Gen. J. E. Johnston and the young Adjutant Major followed that intrepid leader through many of the most stirring scenes of the war. Later he was assigned to Gen. Bragg for service in the Kentucky campaign. He missed the battle of Perryville, as his division was detained to engage Gen. Sill, who was chased out of reach and his provision train taken, which was an important capture at that time. He was in the fight at Munfordville, Ky., and was in the bloody battles of Missionary Ridge, Chickamauga and other fights in North Georgia. He took part in all the fighting around Atlanta and was in the battle at Jonesboro, Ga., August 31, 1862. When this battle began, Adjutant Ferrell was suffering with a blinding sick headache and was hardly able to hold up his head. When the bugle sounded he responded with his regiment and went into the fight with a handkerchief tied around his head. He soon forgot his headache and during the hottest part of the fight when Gen. Manigault galloped by him and asked "Adjutant how's your head?" he replied: "I forgot I had a headache when the battle began."

In this battle many soldiers became demoralized and it was his duty to rally them. At one time he halted three or four men in a squad who were going to the rear. One of them claimed that they were being sent for a litter, but when they were ordered back one young fellow came close to him and said "Major I can't take the chance. In my first battle I was shot through the body and spent months in a hospital. The first battle after I returned I was shot the same way and am just back. I have a presentiment that I will be shot the third time and killed. I haven't the heart to fight." After the battle he answered roll call, looking shame-faced when his name was called, but, in a subsequent battle the gallant young soldier fell dead with his face to the foe. He conquer'd his temporary faint-heartedness, but his presentiment came true. Maj. Ferrell in telling the story said the incident was one of the occurrences of the war that were vividly impressed upon his memory.

At Dalton, Ga., his stern sense of duty caused him to report himself for neglect of duty.

His General sent a courier with orders that Adjutant Ferrell detail a squad of men to construct a bridge early the next morning. The Adjutant was sitting down to his dinner and placed the paper on his table to be attended to as soon as dinner was over; before he finished eating he was summoned for some other duty and in his haste forgot the important order. Morning came and about nine o'clock another courier dashed up and handed him a demand to know whose fault it was that the previous order had been disobeyed.

He wrote out a brief statement of the fact, saying that it was entirely his fault, due to the disturbed condition of his mind and the conflicting demands upon his time.

He waited expecting to be ordered to the guardhouse and relieved from duty, but the kind hearted General sent back a note: "Adjutant Ferrell's excuse is entirely satisfactory. We are all liable to mistakes, hurry up the detail."

Maj. Ferrell was in many bloody battles during the four years he was in the army, but was never wounded. He surrendered at High Point, S. C. and was paroled, being allowed to retain his horse.

The following fall he returned to Greenville, S. C. and resumed teaching in the Greenville Female College. While there he was married to Miss Elizabeth Austin, the devoted wife who has been his beloved helpmeet for more than 40 years. In the Greenville College he taught under the late Prof. Chas. Hatlette Judson, who died in January 1907, shortly after having been awarded a Carnegie Fund annuity.

From Greenville he went to Covington, Md., five miles from Baltimore, and taught one year in a military school, and in 1869 came to Frankfort, Ky., and for the succeeding four years taught in the Kentucky Military Institute.

In September, 1873, he came to Hopkinsville and established Ferrell's Military Academy, afterwards known as the Hopkinsville High School. The school was a success from the start and it became necessary for him to employ two assistants. Col. M. H. Crump of Bowling Green, Ky., Judge Frank D. Glasgow of Lexington, Va., Hon. F. D. Peabody (since deceased) of Augusta, Ga., and Prof. C. C. Tauch, of the Alabama State University, were his assistants from time to time during the next ten years.

The school was conducted according to Maj. Ferrell's rigid ideas of discipline gained in the army and from teaching in military schools and the fame of his school soon spread far and wide. The curriculum embraced languages, higher mathematics and the sciences and the course was practically the same as taught in many colleges. He added a boarding department and his school prospered from year to year and hundreds of young men received a liberal education in the academy that stood near the river at the foot of Thirteenth street.

Conditions changed in 1881 when the public graded school system was inaugurated and Maj. Ferrell changed his school from a Military Academy to a high school for young men. But ten or fifteen years later the public school added high school grades and he again adjusted himself to new conditions and changed his school to a select training school, where boys were given a course that fitted them to enter any college almost without an examination. During this period he trained boys who entered some of the larger colleges and attained highest honors. Here while quietly pursuing the course he chose for his life work, he taught until February 1903, lacking but a few months of having thirty years in the same school room. One night after a day as usual in the school room, he retired seemingly in good health, but during the night was stricken with paralysis of his left side. For awhile his life was despaired of, but he slowly improved until he ceased to be a constant sufferer, but has for more than four years remained a helpless invalid. His school was of course immediately closed down for no one could be found to take his place—and his long and useful career was at an end.

The records are not complete and it cannot be told just how many "Ferrell's boys" there were from 1873 to 1903. It is safe to say that not fewer than 1,000 young men were taught by Maj. Ferrell personally and many of them succeeded beyond the fondest dreams of their boyhood days. They are to-day found in many states of the union and no matter where they are there is a tender spot in the heart of every one of them for the noble old veteran who wore out his life in teaching boys how to become good men and honest, upright citizens. Scores of "Boys," as he loves to call them, have visited him during the long years that he has lain upon his bed, or been rolled about the streets in his invalid's chair.

His only son, Prof. C. C. Ferrell, is a professor in the Miss. University and Maj. Ferrell and his noble wife, who has cared for him so tenderly since he was stricken down, live alone in their handsome home on South Main street. Sustained by a sublime faith, he is waiting for God's will to be done. No grand old man ever closed a more honorable career in the school room. In many instances he taught father and son the same rooms as the years passed by and one generation taught the next to honor and revere him for the noble traits of a character that his "boys" could not come in contact with without being permanently benefited in many ways.

If the prayers and good wishes of his former pupils would restore him to health, he would soon be well again, for age had not impaired his faculties when he fell. By his own deeds he has erected a monument that will live in the memories of men, until the last one of his "Boys" has been called to "books" on the other side.

Free Scholarships.

The Fall Session of the Western Kentucky State Normal School at Bowling Green will begin September 3, 1907.

Christian County is entitled to ten additional scholarships for the present scholastic year. These scholarships are awarded in addition to those issued last year. I also have a right to appoint eligible applicants to use grants of unused scholarships.

The Normal is doing a great work and is offering boys and girls, men and women, excellent opportunities to acquire an education at a small cost. With board at rates ranging from $9 to $12 per month everything furnished, and with free tuition, an education has certainly been put by the State within the reach of everyone.

Persons sixteen years old or older are eligible to appointment. Those who desire free tuition should see or write me before August 10 and make application for free instruction.

Arm Worn Out.

Major Paymaster Eugene Coffin, of the army at Manila, had his left arm amputated, the result of infection from the handling of money paying troops. He was a veteran of the Civil War and a member of the old McKinley regiment.

GREAT BALL GAME

Boston National League Team Coming to Central City August 7th.

It was advertised throughout Western Kentucky that the Boston National League Base Ball Team would play at Central City the 6th of last April, but just before the team left its training quarters at Thomasville, Ga., one of their players, Harry Dolan, died, and all of their southern exhibitions were canceled so that the team could attend the funeral of their comrade. But Manager John T. May, of the Central City Athletic Association, met President George B. Dovy, of the Boston National League Base Ball Company at Cincinnati, when he played there a few weeks ago, and accompanied him to St. Louis and arranged for him to bring his team to Central City, Wednesday August 7th, and this high class base ball attraction will, without any kind of doubt, be seen there on that date.

This is an unprecedented affair in the history of ball. Never before did a big league team stop to play a game in a small town, or a large one, either in this section of the country. Central City will enjoy the distinction of being the only town south of the Ohio River that ever played a National League team during the championship season and the people living in this section of Kentucky should not fail to avail themselves of this single opportunity to see such a big ball game. Arrangements will be made with the railroads for special rates and excursion trains for those who cannot be accommodated by the regular trains.

The game will be called at 2:00 o'clock, p. m.

DIED IN HENDERSON.

Former Hopkinsville Man Victim of Typhoid Fever.

William Charlton's remains arrived here Thursday night from Henderson. Mr. Charlton was a former citizen of this city but for a while had been making his home in Henderson. Typhoid fever caused his death. He was about 56 years old and is survived by several children. His wife died several years since. He has a number of relatives living in the city and county. Burial took place yesterday in the Hayes family burying ground, on the Butter road.

DISEMBOWELED.

Horrible Injury to Former Hopkinsville Man.

W. H. Eggleton, an employee of the Frank Alford Lumber Company, Brook and Lee streets, was terribly injured Tuesday afternoon at the company's plant by being caught in the machinery and whirled around, says the Louisville Times. He was disemboweled. Eggleton was taken to St. Mary and Elizabeth Hospital, where he is in a critical condition. He lives at 2006 Duncans street, and has a wife and two children.

Concerning Women.

"The statement often made when women vote they will no longer have children, or if they do, those children will be badly reared, has been proven false. They not only have children, but they have beautiful children; and not only beautiful children in all the United States, but in the great beauty contest which the newspapers of the separate states have been waging, Marguerite Frey, of Denver, Colo., has been declared the 'Winner of the National Beauty Tournament.' Miss Frey's mother, a widow, is a fully enfranchised citizen."

A Friend at Court.

Judge Pritchard, in the United States Court at Asheville, N. C., discharged Ticket Agents Wood and Wilson, of the Southern railway, on habeas corpus proceedings, and declared the penalty clause of the new Rate Bill unconstitutional.
